The organization of an Example Paragraph

An example paragraph gives examples to help the readers clearly understand the idea of the writer about a topic.

The topic sentence

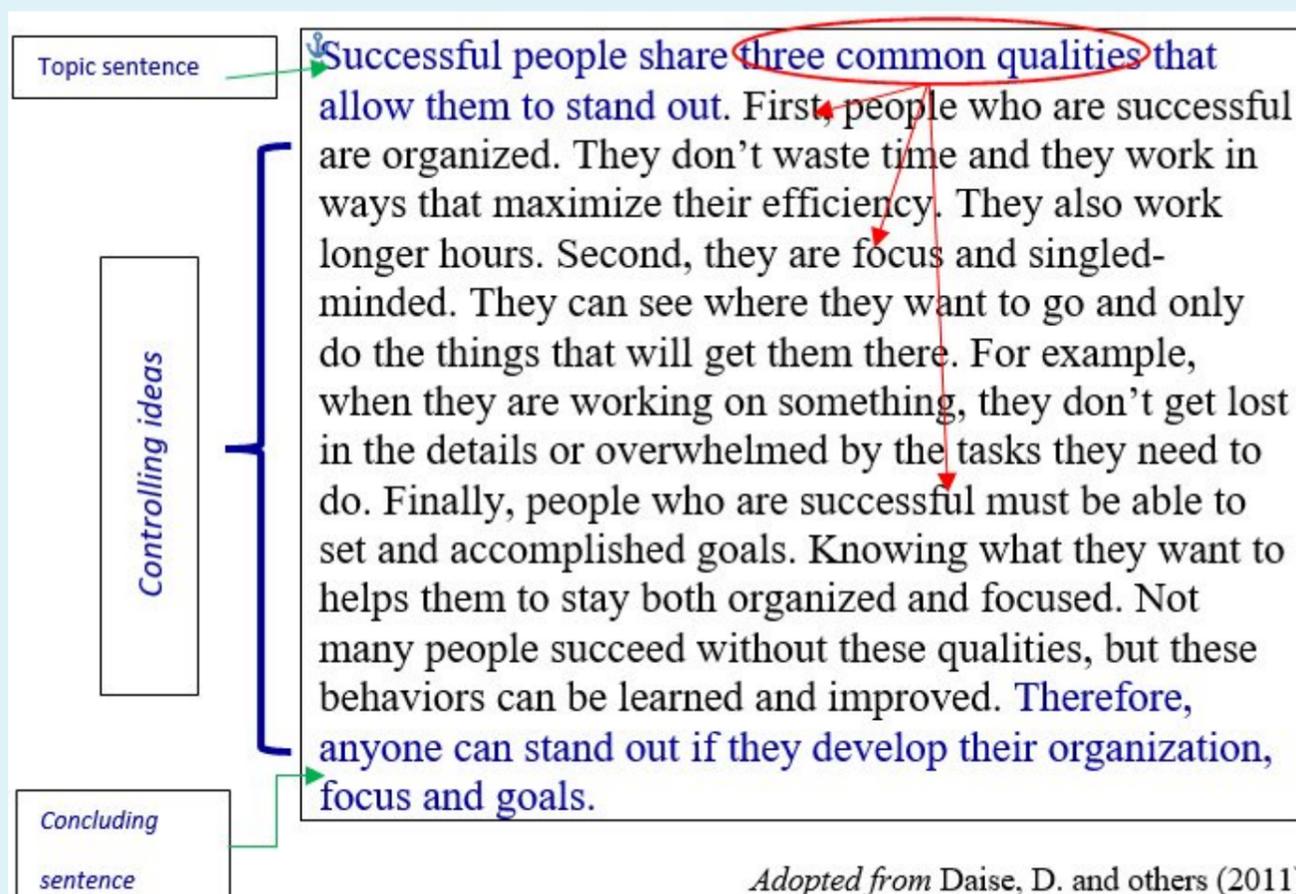

The first sentence in an example paragraph is called the topic sentence that introduces the topic and the controlling idea, or what the writer will say about the topic.

Supporting sentences

The middle sentences or the supporting sentences (ideas) give examples that support the controlling idea. These examples give a clear picture of the writer's specific meaning.

The Concluding Sentence:

The last sentence of the paragraph restates the topic and what the writer has just said about it by using different words or phrases.
